Brand New 733 10th Street Development is the Site for DCBIA Event

DCBIA teams with signature sponsor Skanska USA to host Getting Back to Business on the rooftop of the distinctly designed and newly completed 733 10th Street, NW.

Washington, D.C., August 25, 2011 – District of Columbia Building Industry Association (DCBIA) is scheduled to kick off their fall event season with Getting Back to Business on Thursday, September 15 at 6 PM. The annual event will be held at Skanska USA’s newest development known as 733 10th Street NW, located in the East End submarket of Washington DC. The 10-story, 165,000 RSF Class A trophy building is currently 90% leased and is seeking LEED Gold certification.

“We are excited to host the rooftop event at 733 10th Street, as it is our first completed project in Washington DC.” Rob Ward, Executive Vice President of Skanska said. “The building combines advanced green building principles with modern conveniences, and attendees will be able to enjoy sweeping views of the monuments from both 10th Street and G Street.”

Getting Back to Business is an opportunity for real estate professionals to network and interact with peers throughout the industry including developers, owners, attorneys, lenders, architects, engineers, general contractors, brokers and many others. DCBIA expects over 400 to be in attendance.

Hosting this signature event at such a landmark location is important to DCBIA. “The outdoor rooftop, beautiful views, and centralized location will make for a unique experience,” said Silvia Dumitrescu, Vice President of Marketing and Business Development for DCBIA. “We are looking forward to the event and expect it to be very successful.”

DCBIA is the premier non-profit trade association representing the real estate development industry in the District of Columbia. As an advocacy organization, DCBIA represents the interests and views of its members before the District of Columbia and the federal governments, community organizations and other business associations. As a service organization, it offers comprehensive educational programs, social events and community service activities.
